Things That Will Never Change

When you are young, it seems as if things never change. Or, maybe, I should say that all things will stay the same. Your mother and father will always be strong and in control. Other members of your family will always be as they are. The place you live, the school you attend, the teachers you have will always be as you have left them.

Reality, at some point, sets in. Family members suffer illness or death. You return to your school and the teachers are all older or different, maybe the school you attended is no longer a school. The person staring back at you in the mirror is not the person in our mind, time has changed even us.

The blessing of growing older is seeing the people you love become who they will be and getting to share in their life. The curse of growing older is losing those closest to you, and coming to the realization that, one day, those who love you will lose you. It makes us search for something consistent to hang onto. It seems as if nothing ever stays the same.

In this changing world, we need things that are constant to center us.

So, we look for things that never change, that are eternal, and the search, inevitably, leads us to God. In the book of Exodus, God states that He is the "I Am." Not the I was, or the I am going to be, God is the God of the present. That has never changed, the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob is the God of us. With that being said, it follows that his attributes will also never change. His love for His creation that was manifested in the sending of His Son, His desire to be involved with us on a personal level. His righteousness that gives us an example of how to live our lives. However, the most important unchanging aspect of God is His promises.

He promised a land to Abraham, and he delivered, He promised a son to a barren woman, and He delivered. He promised a blessing to all nations, and He delivered. Over and over, God has always fulfilled His promises, so I am confident that His promise of eternity is true. So as the years pass, and everything around you changes, never let go of God's unchanging hand!

In His Service,
Rex Walcher, Minister
