The Names of God

What is the name of God? That is a question we do not really have an answer to. The actual name of God is what we call the Tetragrammaton. The four letters, read from right to left, are, YHWH, or JHVH. While there is no consensus about the structure and etymology of the name, the form Yahweh, or Jehovah is now accepted almost universally. The reason we do not know how to pronounce the name is due to the commandment not to take the Lord's name in vain. The Jews took this so seriously that they took the pronunciation from the word. The only time the name was spoken was on the day of atonement by the high priest. This was eventually lost through the persecutions and captivity of Israel. When you see the name LORD in all capitals, in most translations, that is the tetragrammaton, or the actual name of God almighty.

The Bible is, however, full of descriptive names for God. If we add them all together, there are about thirty different names used to address or recognize God in the Old and New Testament. Some of my favorite ones are Shalom, the Lord of peace Judges 6:16-24. El Roi, the God who sees Genesis 16:30, Hagar's name for God, Elohim, the strong creator God, this is the God of creation in Genesis. Immanuel, God with us, Isaiah, a messianic name, looking toward Jesus.

So many ways to describe God. This is carried over into the New Testament with all the descriptive names for Jesus. Alpha and Omega, Prince of Peace, Counselor, Priest, and the list goes on.

Why so many names? It is because God and Christ are so many things to so many people at different times in their lives. He is my Lord, my savior, my counselor, my priest, my king. Get the idea? He is everything I need, and He is everything that you need. Who do you need God to be today?
