Paul

There is no other character in the bible like Paul. He is perhaps the inspiration for more sermons than any other person in the bible except Jesus. Paul considered himself the least of all the Apostles, but history has not agreed with his analysis.

Paul is responsible for all the books of the bible from Romans to Philemon. Hebrews was attributed to Paul for a few centuries, but the authorship is now debated. The only other writer of scripture with more word count than Paul is the gentile, Luke. However, the quantity is not as relevant as the scope of the material.

From letters to individual churches (Romans, Corinth, Ephesus, Philippi, Thessalonica), to circular letters written to whole regions (Galatia), to letters written to individuals (Philemon, Titus, Timothy), the wealth of revelation is unparalleled. Consider for a moment that without Paul we would have no mention of church planting and development. We would have no qualification listed for elders and deacons. His writings also include support of preachers, giving as prospered, and church discipline. Without the writings of Paul, I will promise you the church would look vastly different than it does today.

Possibly one the most important aspects of the writings of Paul deals with the resurrection. I Thessalonians 4, and I Corinthians 15, are unparalleled in scripture regarding a bodily resurrection. When we think of an eternal home with an eternal body, the writings of Paul provide us with the evidence we need.

The resurrection is one doctrine that Paul carried forward from his days as a Pharisee but obtained fruition in the teachings and revelation of Jesus Christ. Paul was the Jew with everything to lose for the cause of Christ. He, however, became our evidence that gaining Christ was worth losing everything.
